Kansas judicial branch changing domain to .gov

The Kansas court system is changing its domain from .org to .gov.

The change will be applied to the judicial branch website, its online systems, and its information portals, as well as to its email addresses. It will be applied in phases.

Changing July 1

On July 1, the domain will change to .gov on the judicial branch website, the online attorney registration portal, and an online attorney directory.

Other changes to come

The change will be applied to other sites, systems, and portals in phases. They are listed on an informational webpage—KSCourts is going .gov—on the judicial branch website.

Email addresses to also change

Starting in late July, the judicial branch will begin changing email addresses for the court system's judges and employees.

Changes to email addresses will occur in stages by office, county, or judicial district, a process that could take several weeks.

What you should do

When we apply the .gov domain to a particular site, system, or portal, we will reroute web traffic to its new location.

As we make these changes, we recommend you update your bookmarks to reflect the new web addresses.

We also recommend that you track our progress, so you know when and where the .gov domain is applied.

Benefits of a .gov domain

The federal government controls who can get a .gov domain, which is one reason a .gov domain is desirable. It clearly communicates the Kansas judicial branch is a government entity. But there are benefits beyond credibility.

Dot gov domains must follow certain rules, which contribute to a more secure environment for all government. By following domain security best practices, users are assured a safe experience.
